The following is an English translation of an article appearing in the Italian newspaper Corriere della Sera:

LEONARDO DEL VECCHIO: «OUR OBJECTIVE IS TO CREATE A TRULY INTEGRATED GROUP»

Following the announcement of the agreement between Delfin and Essilor, Executive Chairman of Luxottica Group Leonardo Del Vecchio gave an interview to Italian newspaper Corriere della Sera to comment on the transaction. Here is the interview in full, as it was released on January 17, 2017.

Why is it possible now?

«Times mature and also competitors evolve. Players in the market watch what the others do. Luxottica had begun investing in the production of lenses a year ago, and this made Essilor start giving more serious thought to an agreement we'd known of its earliest intentions for four years - that was in the best interests of both parties. This time, we really felt the desire to combine ideas and production. I'd like to thank Delfin's GM Romolo Bardin and Francesco Milleri, my own right-hand man over the past three years, who handled the negotiations right at my side and enabled me to achieve in a very short time something we'd never been able to obtain previously.»

You've handed over your holding: does this mean also you've sold out to the French?

«Absolutely not. I know the operation's mechanisms might not be immediately comprehensible, but the final result is simple and clear. Our objective is to create a truly integrated group, from the raw material to the final eyewear product, covering all the distribution channels thoroughly, from wholesale to retail to e-commerce. We decided to dilute our holding in a much larger entity in which we will still retain the controlling interest by far. We accomplished something similar with Delfin in the past with Fonciere des Regions and Beni Stabili. The Luxottica world will remain firmly in Italian hands, with its head in Milano and its heart in the Belluno mountains.

Has Essilor become Italian or is Luxottica now more French?

«I think you're phrasing this in the wrong terms. We're all Europeans, but more than anything else, it's the market that's gone global. Young people from the world over join our companies every year, and this cross-pollination has by now become part of our abundance. I think that becoming first more European and then more international is immensely valuable in understanding the market, bringing us closer to consumers, and taking the best from these cultures. I don't expect any form of opposition at all between the two companies – Italian soul and French soul, only the extra value added by the combination of the two.

But it's the Italian stock exchange that's bidding adieu to Luxottica stock ...

«The operation was structured to ensure it brought us the desired result with the greatest possible assurance, the foundation of the new EssilorLuxottica, and this led to an exclusively technical decision for its rapid conclusion. The option of double listing on both the Italian and French stock exchanges is still on the table and will be assessed in days to come, as is the possibility of listing on the US stock exchange.»

The market interpreted the operation also as a step towards making Luxottica less dependent on potential family differences in the future, given the size and composition of yours.

«The governance of this big company is already in excellent hands today, which in the new company will be even stronger. Luxottica is running no risk. My family will remain a point of reference for the new company, and as I have repeated in the past, with a shareholder's role more and more. Among other things, the Essilor operation diversifies Delfin investments by adding to a business prevalently involved with fashion and design like Luxottica one that operates in research and technology».

For how much longer do you intend to remain at the helm?

«Both groups will provide one half of the Directors. The Executive Presidency has been reserved to me for the next three years, then the Shareholders' Meeting must decide on the Group's governance. We will have 31% of the vote at the Meeting and the second-largest shareholder will have 4%. Therefore I don't think the votes will have to be counted because we will all base our decisions always on what's best for the company and all its shareholders.»

You've opted for a governance that assigns virtually equivalent powers to Hubert Sanières and you. Things might not be easy.

«I'm very happy to be able to work with Hubert, whom I esteem both as a manager and a professional. We both have a lot to learn. The coming years will be extremely interesting for everyone. There will never be competition, only a genuine and loyal working together.»

One year ago, you resumed control of Luxottica, arousing some negative comments for having gone back to work at 80 years of age. Was this what you had in mind then?

«The agreement with Essilor is immensely satisfying for me, but my one desire is and always has been to work for the sake of the company. Action had to be taken at a deep level in order to bring Luxottica back on the right path because it was losing its simplicity and strategic clarity. The changes in the organization and at the top that many people failed to understand were indispensable for this change and above all for obtaining a stronger and more modern company capable of facing even this fundamental appointment with the right determination. The combination with Essilor is an important part of this new vision. Both companies have a team of highly qualified young managers, as is clearly demonstrated by the excellent results that have always been achieved. The minute I see that my presence is no longer indispensable, I'll abandon every executive position I hold.»

Will the merger create overlapping responsibilities and poise the risk of dismissals?

«I d like to reassure our Italian employees - even if this assurance does not come from me as a shareholder but rather from the excellence of our personnel, who are indispensable in making our Made in Italy production unique and synonymous with craftsmanship styling and technological perfection. This is the best guarantee that they will retain their central importance in the new company s strategies. It s no mere coincidence that the eyewear production sector has remained alive and successful in Italy alone. They know that they will always have a place in my heart and that they are the factor of our success. If we analyze our organizational structures around the world, complementariness is much more evident than overlapping.»

On the subject of numbers, how will you close 2016? And how do you see 2017?

«We've measured the potential and great strength of this company once again. We've marshaled structural interventions, strengthened our distribution channels in North America and China, made substantial investments in lenses, in our retail channels and in digital communication, and I've dedicated the management's time and effort to actions that I deemed essential in planning a future that is now being developed also through the agreement with Essilor. Our growth has not stopped and we will close the year in the right position to take up this new adventure.»

Aren't you at least a little bit worried about putting Luxottica on the line?

«I'm not losing anything at all of the company I created. On the contrary, in the long run it's the only way that I can see to keep it strong and competitive. We have to overcome the fears that often keep Italian companies in check and meet new challenges, accepting change as positive. Making decisions and making mistakes isn't risky. I think not having the courage to make decisions may be fatal for a company, instead.»
