Imposition of a Fine, etc.

On December 8, 2010, the European Commission adopted a decision to impose a fine of 215 million against LG Display Co., Ltd. and LG Display Taiwan Co., Ltd. for violation of the European Union competition laws relating to the alleged anti-competitive acts in the LCD industry.

Fine Imposed by the European Commission for Breach of EU Competition Law

Seoul, Korea (December 9, 2010) LG Display [NYSE: LPL, KRX: 034220] filed a disclosure with the Korean Exchange regarding a fine levied by the European Commission (EC).

8th (Europe local time), the EC announced its decision to impose a fine of 215 million against LG Display for a violation of the European Union competition law by certain LCD panel manufacturers.

LG Display acknowledges the wrongful acts of the past and respects the European Commission's regulatory authority in this regard. However, LG Display may, after careful review and consideration, appeal today's decision to the EU General Court if it finds there were procedural or substantive due process issues with the investigation.

As the EC exercises wide discretion in the investigation and determination of fines, many companies appeal the decision to the courts. The appeal procedure at the General Court usually lasts more than two years. The final amount may change as a result of the appeal process, and in certain circumstances, the fine may be significantly reduced.

The EC fine is related to certain anticompetitive acts in the LCD industry between late 2001 and early 2006. LG Display has taken comprehensive measures to avoid repetition of such mistakes and reaffirms its commitment to highest ethical standards and transparency in the company's management.

LG Display does not expect the EC's decision to have any adverse effect on its business operations or its relationship with its customers and business partners. LG Display will continue its best efforts to supply the best quality products to its global customers.
