Our Commitment to Connecticut Is About To Get Even Stronger

The proposed merger between Northeast Utilities – which includes Connecticut Light & Power and Yankee Gas – and Boston-based NSTAR has generated considerable discussion about how the merger would impact our state. And rightly so, given the unique role our companies play in the economic and environmental future of Connecticut.

With our country’s leadership working to establish a nationwide energy policy, the results of this effort will profoundly impact Connecticut and the entire northeast. A national energy policy will reshape how we consume and gain access to diverse energy sources and will have broad economic and environmental implications.

The proposed merger between Northeast Utilities and NSTAR would create one of the largest utilities in the United States. The combined company would have an enterprise value of more than $17 billion and would warrant, by virtue of its size, regional impact and the population it serves, a vital position for us in national energy circles.

Merger Strengthens Our Commitment to Connecticut

The merger will place Connecticut at the center of national and regional energy issues, enhancing the voice of our customers in the debate. At the same time, Connecticut Light & Power and Yankee Gas customers will see no change in their current relationship with their utility. The same people will answer the phone when you call, service your meters and maintain our distribution and transmission systems statewide.

The Northeast Utilities/NSTAR marriage assures the regional benefits of a locally controlled energy company for years to come and increases the ability of a larger, stronger and more regionally centered utility headquartered in Hartford and Boston to influence national policy. This benefits all the state’s citizens. At a pivotal time, it gives our customers, state and region a much stronger voice in energy issues than ever before.

The proposed merger not only strengthens our voice nationally, it means that the jobs, the millions of dollars in investments and the support of communities throughout the state that we have long provided – and will continue to provide – will remain in Connecticut.

We have proudly served Connecticut since 1917. We look forward to serving our state even more capably for generations to come.
