Excerpts of Transcript of Video Message from NYSE Euronext Chief Executive Officer Duncan Niderauer to all Employees (January 7, 2012)

Happy New Year everybody and welcome to 2013. I know it's been a crazy few weeks for everybody given the news that we announced on December 20, but hopefully now that you've had a chance to digest the news you are as excited as I am about what lies ahead for our great company. If I think about it, 2013's macro environment I thought was going to be pretty tough. And I think the Board agreed. And I think that a lot of you agreed too. And it wasn't clear when the headwinds that we have been facing were likely to abate. It might have continued into 2014, it's hard to know. But, I think that when presented with the opportunity late last year to do what I really think is a game-changing merger, that completely changes the trajectory of the company, I think we were wise to do it and I think we will look back on this as something we can be really, really proud of. That we decided to do something that gives us a real chance to be on the front foot again. Now, you should also know that my alma mater embraces the number 13 and I think 13 is a lucky number, unlike a lot of people. So I guess that we will find out pretty soon if I'm right. What I thought I'd start with is just a few updates on the deal just so that we can try to do what we did throughout the deal with DB, and I promise we will commit to keeping you as up to speed as we are possibly able to throughout the process just so that we try to address any questions and concerns that people have because I know that there are a lot of uncertainty out there. So, first of all let me just put everyone's mind at ease a little bit. I don't really have a lot to report today, we kind of gave everybody the last couple of weeks off to catch their breath. Some of us were in and out of the office, but not a lot really happened to push the deal forward. So, what are we going to be working on this month in the coming few weeks here? First of all, we are starting to put together some integration teams. There is a whole stream around our derivatives business. There will be another stream around, sort of, the corporate functions and technology. So you will be hearing from me in the next few weeks about who is going to be staffing those various integration teams.

A couple of other work streams: one, as you would expect there is going to be a big regulatory work stream, so we've already started to map out a timeline of the approvals that we need, when we are going to have to be where, and we're going to be comparing notes later next week on that and then mapping out a game plan that we will probably share with you guys some time this month. Lastly, there will be a work stream focused really around the Euronext cash and options businesses on the continent in Europe. And what we are trying to think about there is listening to the policymakers, listening to the regulators and listening to what we think the shareholders want. We think, particularly, given what has happened with regulation since the banking crisis of a few years ago, we think that there is a big movement and a desire to have those businesses made more independent again, so we're going to be exploring those opportunities a lot more to come there. Now, if you've noticed around the deal, the initial reactions have been really, really positive. From our shareholders' point of view it delivered returns in the short term and the promise of more returns in the medium and long term if we build the company together that I think we can build. That's been borne out by the conversations that I have held with the shareholders, many of whom have told us that not only are they not selling, they are actually buying more shares in our company and shares in ICE to be a bigger part of the new company going forward. So, what does that mean for us? I think 2013 for us is going to be all about execution. It is really going to be about running our own company to build momentum into the deal.
