Sprint Issues Statement on Clearwire Transaction

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. Jan. 8, 2013 Sprint (NYSE: S) today issued the following statement in response to Clearwire's announcement that a special committee of Clearwire's board of directors is considering a proposed transaction from DISH.

Sprint believes its agreement to acquire Clearwire, which offers Clearwire shareholders certain and attractive value, is superior to the highly conditional DISH proposal.

In contrast, the DISH proposal includes a series of interdependent commercial agreements, debt and equity purchases and spectrum sales, which together with the other conditions required by DISH to complete the transaction, makes the proposal not viable. In addition, the DISH proposal would require Sprint to voluntarily waive rights that it holds as a stockholder of Clearwire and that it possesses through various vendor and customer contracts that significantly predate Sprint's proposed acquisition of the remainder of Clearwire. Sprint does not intend to waive any of its rights and looks forward to closing the transaction with Clearwire and helping consumers across the country realize the benefits of this combination.

iConnect Article: Clearwire receives unsolicited bid from DISH Network

On Tuesday afternoon, Clearwire issued a news release indicating that it has received an unsolicited proposal from DISH Network Corp. to purchase certain spectrum assets and acquire up to all of Clearwire's common stock for $3.30 per share. As you may recall, Clearwire entered into a definitive agreement with Sprint Nextel Corp. (announced on 12/17/12) for Sprint to acquire the approximately 50 percent stake in Clearwire that we currently don't own for $2.97 per share.

According to the Clearwire news release, the DISH proposal is only a preliminary indication of interest and is subject to numerous and material uncertainties and conditions. Clearwire has a fiduciary responsibility to its shareholders, so a special committee of their board of directors will engage DISH to discuss and evaluate the proposal.

Also Tuesday afternoon, Sprint issued a news release reiterating the superiority and certainty of the Sprint acquisition of Clearwire:

Sprint believes its agreement to acquire Clearwire, which offers Clearwire shareholders certain and attractive value, is superior to the highly conditional DISH proposal.

In contrast, the DISH proposal includes a series of interdependent commercial agreements, debt and equity purchases and spectrum sales, which together with the other conditions required by DISH to complete the transaction, makes the proposal not viable. In addition, the DISH proposal would require Sprint to voluntarily waive rights that it holds as a stockholder of Clearwire, and that it possesses through various vendor and customer contracts that significantly predate Sprint's proposed acquisition of the remainder of Clearwire. Sprint does not intend to waive any of its rights and looks forward to closing the transaction with Clearwire and helping consumers across the country realize the benefits of this combination.
