WILBUR ROSS SAYS A MITTAL/ARCELOR COMBINATION WOULD HAVE BENEFITS FOR ALL SHAREHOLDERS

Chicago, February 27, 2006 "A combination of Mittal and Arcelor would take consolidation to a new level and bring about further considerable benefits for all stakeholders," said Wilbur Ross, Non Executive Director of Mittal Steel Company yesterday, Sunday 26th February.

Speaking at a dinner in Chicago, Mr Ross said that despite the progress the industry has made in recent years towards a more consolidated business model, the sector is still afforded comparatively low ratings by the financial markets. "We still have to demonstrate that consolidation has progressed enough to have a real benefit in terms of reducing volatility and ensuring sustainability of earnings. Ultimately this will be improved by better management of supply and demand which will further improve through having a more consolidated production base."

Mr Ross founded International Steel Group in 2002 after purchasing the assets of Bethlehem, LTV, Weirton, Acme and Georgetown which were in Chapter 11 due to the cyclical downturn of 2001. Speaking at the dinner, Mr Ross explained why, despite ISG being a profitable, well-management stand-alone business with good growth prospects, the company took the decision to merge with Mittal Steel.

"Trying to emulate the global profile and portfolio of Mittal Steel would have taken years," he said. "Merging with them on the other hand would enable us to accelerate our long-term strategy and growth plans, enabling our shareholders to benefit immediately from exposure to low-cost, fast-growing developing markets. The merger gave us the opportunity to deliver to our shareholders immediately the business model that we wanted but that otherwise would have taken years for us to achieve."

Mr Ross compared the benefits of a Mittal/Arcelor merger to the Mittal/ISG merger. "Combining with Mittal will accomplish Arcelor's stated plan in the most efficient way, simultaneously creating a much stronger, more
